REAL NEWS SERVICE.

Smokers know something about the enjoyment of "Twenty Minutes in Havana." The Daily News yesterday connected the whole people of Ama-illo with Havana for two hours at its own expense. The Bulletin Service on the prize fight was a success from beginning to end. From 500 to 2000 fight fans and lovers of the manly sport gathered in front of the Nunn Electric Co. business house and kept up with every round of the Havana fight. Five minutes after time was called in the ring nearly two thousand miles away the people in Amarillo knew the result of round one, and from that moment till the twenty-fourth round was over the bulletins flashed the results as fast as electricity, copper wires and telegraphers could transmit them. The Western Union is entitled to creditable mention in this connection. Its service

Fifteen minutes after the last round had announced Willard's success and Johnson's defeat, the Daily News Extra was on the street. It was complete. It carried a full report of the fight with timely comment and sidelights by staff writers. Hundreds of the Extra were grabbed by the people in a few minutes. There were ample copies to supply every demand, and a press ready and able to print six thousand more in an hour. Hundreds of the Extra were ordered by telegraph, telephone and mail from every section of the Panhandle. The News put the entire Panhandle on the map and brought the remotest corner of the Plains country up to the minute.

It was a newspaper stunt worthy the name. It was actually "delivering the goods," Gentlemen, minus the horntooting.

In the twenty-fifth Willard got a right swing to heart. When the round BAVANA Caba, April 5 -At closed Johnson sent word to his wife that he was all in, and told her tight would not start herore passible to start home as she was on the way out. A stinging right to Johnson's jaw caused the negro to crumple on the floor of the ring partly outside the ropes, where he was counted out. There was much discussion among fight followers whether Johnson really was knocked out or in a zense was being smashed into unconsciousness. He certainly was not put out according to the concensus of opinion. rangements are perjected and there Johnson knew there was no possibility of winning so he chose to take a corni rather than stand punishment. Johnson often stated that fighting is a business and he would not foolishly submit to repeated knockdowns when he found out he met his master. A recend after the referee counted ten Johnson quickly arose and the spectators rushed into the ring. There seemed to be trouble threatthe is cheaved of all but thefered ened and soldiers cleared the ring.

Willard here on the island tonight was cheered on the streets. He accepted his honors modestly. No fight of heavy weights has gone to a finish eleaner or was less brutal. Both pugilists showed few marks of battle.

The Isle of Cuba, set like a jewel in the Carribean Sea, with the beautiful harbor of Havana disclosing the old Spanish town with its ancient architecture and broad palm shaded streets.

Fertile in soil, incomparable in its winter climate, and the home of the most famous cigar material harvested in any part of the globe, Johnson blocked Williard's lead, this island has been the scene of bloody conflict ever since its disrelating him out of position, scoring covery. Spaniards ruled it with an iron hand, insurrections have been so freeze as the proverbial flea for which the busy ki-oodle ish Main landed and spent or puried the fruits of their dangerous and bloody business.

Into the Harbor of Santiago De Cuba, Lieutenant Hobson (yesterday Amarillo's guest) drove the Merrimac to be sunk by the guns of Merro Castle in an endeavor to block the channel and pen up the Spanish squadron.

Since Uncle Sam sat down on the island in 1899 as custodian of the peace, and incidently to fill his "pipe of peace" with the fragrant Havana weed, the "Isle of Cuba" has slowly settled down to a state of comparative quietude. Today, however, it presents the old scene of war and excitement.

Many steamers ploughing through the Florida Straits landed thousands of American invaders on Cuban soil who are thirsting for battle and willing to bet on their opinion.

The day is hot and clear and fifteen thousand excited and gestulating men are streaming into and filling the immense arena.

Coats are off and carried, silk handkerchiefs are stuffed into collars and the excited, noisy and jushing crowd are packed as tight

A blue cloud of tobacco smoke from ten thousand Habana chears (made in New Jersey) hones like a haze over the crowd. Down in the center of the enclosure and toward which every man in the crowd faces is a rused platform padded and covered with spotless white canvas, upon which the cays of the hot sun strike and radiate in every direction. A double line of ropes supported by corner posts surrounds this platform, and in the opposite corners repose chairs, water burkets and bottles, sponges, lemons, etc. Around these, like a hive of mary bees, burzes a small mob of trainers, robbers, and seconds. Memoryers come tearing up to the ring and telegrams are torn open and hastily read. Men lean out over the ropes and shout orders or calls of greating to acquaintences in the immense crowd.

Suddenly the crowd is hashed | to 1 15 P. M. Jack Johnson wrapped in a big bath robe and accompanied by his manager, is coming down the isle and crawling through the ropes into the ring. An immense roar of greeting goes up from thousands of throats.

Jack sits in his corner and grins at the crowd, occasionally calling to acquaintances.

1:20 P. M. and the roar is duplicated as Willard crawls through the ropes. Many celebrites are introduced, to which introductions no one pays the alightest attention.

Finally Willard and Johnson are introduced to the crowd from the four sides of the ring by Referee Weish. The ring is cleared. Referee Welsh steps back and the fight is on.

For twenty-six rounds the two stants fight. Fight fiercely, savagely at times. Black against white, with signs favoring the black from the start. But the Kansas cowboy shows the metal that is in him. He takes the punishment as it comes and stands up like the man he has proved to be. Until the twenty-second round it was Johnson's fight. But after that the burly black lost wind and vitality, and Willard toppled him over with rights and lefts, sending home a terrific swing to Johnson's saw in the twenty-sixth round. It was a knockout blow, fairly dealt, but awful in effect. Johnson fell on the ropes, where he hung until the referee had counted him out and announced the decision in favor of Willard. The black rallied quickly after that, when the thousands arose to their feet, yelled their loudest and crowded into the ring. Soldiers were required to bring order out of bedlam. The fight was at an end. There is a new world's champion. One "White Hope" is a realization-Jess Willard, the Kansas cowboy.
